

daily GOOD

Learn to see what you are looking at. --Christopher Paolini

WoodSwimmer

This short film by engineer and stop-motion animator Brett Foxwell, in collaboration with musician and animator bedtimes, offers a mesmerizing look into cross sections of a piece of raw wood as it goes through a milling machine. The imagery produced captures the wood's unique growth rings, knots and weathered spots. Due to the speed with which the images are animated, the grains begin to flow in a vibrant dance that is both abstract and yet very real.

Be The Change:

Focus on one plant, tree or other natural object in your environment that you see regularly. Can you see anything on close examination that you have missed before?