

We Are Weavers, by Jon Madian

we are weavers woven into and from an ancient ever renewing fabric on an invisible loom more subtle than breath

at one turn we pull to add to our own design to sing each life's most important song i am, i belong

in another turn we push to etch the themes built into pyramid, cathedral and telescope, all designed to search the mystery of hope & will each of us, if our life is blessed, leaves sufficient yarn for the next generation to pick up the many living threads whose origins are beyond the pure geometry of stars and with bone and marrow shuttle we leave the foundation for those who will weave the fabric of tomorrow
