

daily GOOD

The inner life of a Black child, I think, is one of the most sacred places on Earth. --Major Jackson

To Observe that Kind of Devotion

"Orion's poetry editor Camille Dungy recently sat down with poet, friend, and Orion board member Major Jackson to discuss their thoughts on literary stewardship, environmental writings complicated legacy, the sacred inner lives of Black children, small towns, urban parks, building community, talking to foxes, and connection to the natural world." Check out their conversation here.

Be The Change:

Check out a selection of Major Jackson's poetry here.